Each of the twelve children who win the art contest will not only be awarded a new computer, but they will also have their winning drawing framed and displayed in one of Sacred Wind's offices. John Badal, CEO of the Company, stated: "Encouraging the technological opportunities for our children is important for the educational advancement and economic development of the next generation. We are pleased to help support children's educational efforts in many ways: through college scholarships, computer training and gifting computers to students."

In 2009, Sacred Wind was voted as "The Most Inspiring Small Business in America" through the American Express/NBC Shine A Light contest because of its commitment to making a difference in the communities in its territory.
